HEADED TO DC IN THE MORNING. Getting a little antsy. ARE WE SEEING MASS MAGA PRESENCE ALREADY?

I'm traveling alone from Texas. Unfortunately I'm flying and not driving. Coming a little lighter than originally planned.

I live in VA but work in DC. Seeing a lot of Trump support already but many are simply trying to look like innocent tourists right now. It's not until I speak with people, find out where they are from and say "are you here for the rally?" that the ice breaks.

There is a difference between fear and caution. They are here prepared for whatever needs to happen, but there are a lot more unkempt 23/30 somethings on the street than usual too. I suspect they may be here to cause trouble.

Depending on what goes down, trouble may be very warranted...

I'm staying well out of DC in VA on Tuesday night. What do you recommend for getting into DC on Wednesday? Good areas to park, how do I get in if the roads are blocked, etc.

I am not going to work this week at all. We have buses traveling from central VA to DC late night tomorrow, 11 buses and we have a wait list but can't find more transport for our oldest pedes.

We are getting dropped off at Arlington National Cemetery (where my entire family group will visit my grandfather's grave, WW2 Navy Pacific, survived) then we will walk across the bridge to the mall.

They likely will shutter the inbound metro. But try to get to Arlington or Alexandria and take metro from there. If closed, next best IMHO, use any method to get to Arlington and be prepared to walk. It is an easy doable walk of about 1.5 miles from Potomac Park (the front of ANC) to the ellipse. And there will be so much spirit you feel like you are flying.

If you're flying into Dulles, here's info on a metro bus direct to the Silver Line metro (Wiehle-Reston Station). The Silver Line metro will take you into DC.
